Derived from the renowned multi-volume International Encyclopaedia of Laws, this book provides ready access to how the legal dimension of prevention against harm and loss allocation is treated in South Africa. This traditional branch of law not only tackles questions which concern every lawyer, whatever his legal expertise, but also concerns each person's most fundamental rights on a worldwide scale. Following a general introduction that probes the distinction between tort and crime and the relationship between tort and contract, the monograph describes how the concepts of fault and unlawfulness, and of duty of care and negligence, are dealt with in both the legislature and the courts. The book then proceeds to cover specific cases of liability, such as professional liability, liability of public bodies, abuse of rights, injury to reputation and privacy, vicarious liability, liability of parents and teachers, liability for handicapped persons, product liability, environmental liability, and liability connected with road and traffic accidents. Principles of causation, grounds of justification, limitations on recovery, assessment of damages and compensation, and the role of private insurance and social security are all closely considered. Its succinct yet scholarly nature, as well as the practical quality of the information it provides, make this book a valuable resource for lawyers in South Africa. Academics and researchers will also welcome this very useful guide, and will appreciate its value not only as a contribution to comparative law but also as a stimulus to harmonization of the rules on tort.

The history textbook had a paragraph like this: "Yuan Zhen, one hundred thirty-six years, Li Jinsi will ascend to the throne and change the country's name, 'Qing'. It also symbolizes the birth of the first female emperor in history." However, compared to all of these, what people were more interested in was this empress' love history. Many wild histories did not tell the same story about this empress's past. It was about the empress's wife, the crown prince's wife, and even the royal consort of the king of Pbang ...

Published in 1901, M. P. Shiel's The Purple Cloud is an early "last man" science fiction novel.

Foretold by a priest as being against the will of God, Adam Jeffson's Arctic expedition unleashes a terrible fate on the world - a mysterious purple cloud that spreads far into the heavens and across the earth. Jeffson returns to the horror of finding the entire crew dead onboard his ship, and, as he gradually realizes, the entire population of the planet has been wiped out. Descending into a madness, he burns cities, declares himself a monarch with no subjects, attempts to create an enormous golden palace for God and for himself. But everything changes as he discovers he is not the only person left, stumbling upon a naked young woman without any knowledge of the world that once stood.

Small town eastern America during and after the Civil War was home to an imaginative boy with a great intellectual eagerness. Confused by the loss of his family, unstimulated by the town around him, he seemed clothed in a viscosity that slowed his movements and held his thoughts down. He read literature and dwelled in the lives of its heroes, but his own existence seemed to him unimportant. He seemed set apart from the rest of reality. Then through a chain of improbable events, he brightened into an unmistakable glory. He poured out from his innermost being a great and wonderful thing, unlike any other, a gift to the world that only one person can give. The glory that rises in us is the beginning of all invention and the thing that separates each of us from all the others. Its seeds hide in the trivia all around, ruminating, festering, growing where we do not see.

Acerbic, moving, and formally astonishing, Michael Prior's second collection explores the enduring impact of the Japanese internment upon his family legacy and his mixed-race identity. Canada-Japan Literary Award, Winner Dorothy Livesay Poetry Prize, Winner Raymond Souster Award, Shortlist Amid the record-breaking wildfires that scorched British Columbia in 2015 and 2017, the poems in this collection move seamlessly between geographical and psychological landscapes, grappling with cultural trauma and mapping out complex topographies of grief, love, and inheritance: those places in time marked by generational memory "when echo crosses echo." Burning Province is an elegy for a home aflame and for grandparents who had a complex relationship to it--but it is also a vivid appreciation of mono no aware: the beauty and impermanence of all living things. "The fireflies stutter like an apology," Prior writes; "I would be lying to you / if I didn't admit I love them."

Lu Xueyan had reincarnated into someone else's body. Moreover, the original owner was feeling a bit sad. It was fine if she was an Imperial Concubine, but she still had a ball! It was one thing for her husband to go missing, but her big brother actually lost! It was fine that her mother had died, but her stepmother was still as vicious as a snake! It was one thing to be a side concubine, but he had been beaten down by the main concubine to such a pathetic state! Although there were still a few loyal people around, they didn't have anything to eat. Was he going to starve to death?

Peerless Sword Sovereign Funstory

For the Makahs, a tribal nation at the most northwestern point of the contiguous United States, a deep relationship with the sea is the locus of personal and group identity. Unlike most other indigenous tribes whose lives are tied to lands, the Makah people have long placed marine space at the center of their culture, finding in their own waters the physical and spiritual resources to support themselves. This book is the first to explore the history and identity of the Makahs from the arrival of maritime fur-traders in the eighteenth century through the intervening centuries and to the present day. Joshua L. Reid discovers that the "People of the Cape" were far more involved in shaping the maritime economy of the Pacific Northwest than has been understood. He examines Makah attitudes toward borders and boundaries, their efforts to exercise control over their waters and resources as Europeans and Americans arrived, and their embrace of modern opportunities and technology to maintain autonomy and resist assimilation. The author also addresses current environmental debates relating to the tribe's customary whaling and fishing rights and illuminates the efforts of the Makahs to regain control over marine space, preserve their marine-oriented identity, and articulate a traditional future.

The sequel to the OpenBooks science fiction best seller of monsters, Gods, and aliens, unlike anything you've ever read. Well, that could've gone better. Saru had found the blue-eyed girl alright, but she'd blown up half of Philadelphia in the process. Whoops. Now she was a fugitive, robbed of her implants, relying on her "wits," hunted by aliens, Gods, and the monstrous spawn of fornicating universes. It was a crap deal, but it wasn't all bad. She'd stolen a plane, a luxury model with a fully stocked minibar. And she had company, a rogue Gaesporan named John. And there was something strangely liberating about having screwed up so badly you couldn't really do worse. Cloud Country is A Dark Sci-Fi Fantasy Thriller with aliens, monsters, extra-dimensional death Gods and a hardboiled female protagonist. It explores the absurdity of human existence through grotesque satire. RATED R for strong language, mentions of sex, and graphic violence. Contains intense horror and potentially disturbing imagery. Contains brief scenes of torture and animal cruelty. Cloud Country may appeal to fans of H.P. Harvest the Wind Funstory

From the acclaimed author of Wild Like Flowers and Boone comes a debut work of poems and prose--a collection of rhythms and rhymes about the wilding of the regenerative agriculture movement. Griffith's Dark Cloud Country paints a provocative, powerful, and often mystical mosaic that seeks to honor the Creator and reawaken our co-creative capacities as humans by the exploration not of practices but what he calls the four relationships of regeneration: chaos, bounds, art, and singularity.

The Poisonous Cloud BEIJING BOOK CO. INC.

The author examines fully the military role of chemical warfare and its effects on the people, industries, and administrations on both sides; he also considers the growing moral problems it created. The launching of an entirely new weapon that did not discriminate between soldiers and civilians raised complex issues which were debated endlessly between the wars and which, in recent years, have led to agreement among the powers not to use chemical or biological warfare. It's 1947, and English war bride Marian Parker wonders if she married the wrong Yank after two years of waiting for him and a 5,000-mile voyage from home. Marian's mother-in-law, the spiky Hazel Anna Parker, thinks so and complicates everything. And everything in this new land is different. Marian's husband James assures her that farming in Oklahoma with his parents is only a way station to their new life in California. He promises they'll soon have a little house in a town by the sea--a house with lemon trees in the front, orange trees in the back, and room for a houseful of kids. The people Marian meets aren't so sure, and her family back home continues to doubt. What everyone does understand is that the war changed everything, and some of the people who came back alive will never be the same.Harold Hill returns to a family farm with no one left on it, Aaron Law goes back to resurrect his legal practice, and somehow, Danny B. Quick never enlisted. Veterans and non-veterans alike sometimes discover their own back yards aren't big enough for their future. As Marian's California dream extends into a vague future, her confrontation with the confusion and loneliness of immigration leads her to take actions never anticipated for her by those she left behind in the United Kingdom. Friends like schoolteacher Hypatia Alexander, who has her own secrets from the war, and recent sorority girl and college grad Deidre Dailey make all the difference as Marian's world expands from the farm into a future where so many want to persuade her to take the path they think best. Ultimately, Marian risks everything to save her marriage, and it should work, shouldn't it?
